

Forget holidays, it's all go at the Quays

HOPE Island developer John Fish is going nowhere this holiday season.

He reckons there's too much work to do.

Now that the city council has given the developer the nod on marina berths at Marina Quays, and a clear run to start promoting the complete house, land and marina package, Mr Fish says it's head down and bum up.

"There'll be no holidays for me," he says.

Mr Fish says he will be pounding the beat, starting this weekend at the Marina Quays markets, drumming up business and possibly sales.

"Once I've achieved 50 (property) sales personally, then I'll have a holiday," he says.

Let's hope he can have a break this time next year, at least.

Happy berth day too

JOHNSON Fish has also sent out bouquets to two rival pontoon manufacturers for helping him out at Marina Quays.

Mr Fish is using Pacific Pontoon and Pier to build berths but a shortage of piling rigs has put progress on hold.

No problem, says Superior Jetties, which has stepped in with a spare rig to get the job done.

"It's unbelievable," says Mr Fish, who describes it as co-operation 'at its best'.

Superior did a lot of the refurbishment work at the formerly Fish-owned Hope Harbour marina, while Pacific Pontoon worked with Mr Fish at Martha Cove.

"I put out an SOS and a rival came out to help Johnny out," says Mr Fish.

"It was really fantastic."

Yes, he's certainly feeling the love right now.
